

Josh Pease is the Youth Defense Project Director at the State Appellate Defender Office. He leads efforts to reform representation of youth in delinquency cases across the state at all levels by spearheading reforms impacting youth in the justice system and facilitating trainings to improve the quality of representation those youth receive. Prior to joining SADO, Josh worked in private practice with a focus on representing children. He earned a reputation as one of the preeminent children's law attorneys in the state through his advocacy for his clients and his dedication to systemic reforms.
